2. The audio tape starts listing the qualities of an ideal patient. Each quality listed appears on the head map in the book. Make a note of the qualities listed, and when you have them all, you can look at the head map on the back of the photo to see what message you can get. "Tune" = "O", etc.

Transcript from Tape:
I am starting to fear that the loss of so many subjects is going to bring about some undue attention. The latest round of experiments is yielding some positive results, I believe. I am conducting an experiment now. I intend to begin hiding my findings; I can't run the risk of them being found until my work is done. In the event something happens to me, the ideal patient can help. The ideal patient should be one who is in tune, can imitate, is of a certain size, and values friendship. They should also be mirthful and amative with spirituality, and they need to be secretive. Finally, the ideal patient will display vitality, be in tune, be agreeable, spiritual, display good continuity, have a good appetite, and be of good size.
